Hail, Stanford, hail!

The Flags of the University

The heraldic banners for the University's seven schools combine the colors normally used on the hoods of the various disciplines, with symbols illustrating the activities of the histories of the disciplines, particularly at Stanford. The element which appears in all the flags is a triple frond of the redwood tree. By long usage, the Palo Alto redwood tree has been taken as the symbol of the University. The triple frond is used to symbolize the botanical function performed by leaves, namely the synthesis involved in the organization, transmission, and generation of knowledge which takes place in the schools and on which the scholarly growth of the University vitally depends. This common function of the schools is also represented in the Stanford cardinal red flag with the redwood frond embedded in a white circle.

Graduate School of Business

The design elements are the true knot, illustrating the unifying function of management, and the red lion. The lion not only reflects the concern of this school with finance, but also commemorates the school's first dean, Professor Willard E. Hotchkiss, whose family bore the lion on its coat of arms.

Graduate School of Education

Pale blue, the academic and hood color for this school, is used as background for the lamp of learning, commonly employed as a symbol for education. The open book is an additional symbol for education widely used by universities and colleges.

School of Engineering

Orange, the color for the engineering hood, is used in the form of a flexible, expandable framework called a mascle, which illustrates the growth of this discipline in response to the growth and expansion of science and public needs. The deep blue reflects the extensive commitment of Engineering to doctoral studies.

School of Humanities and Sciences White for the arts and yellow (gold) for science are combined in this flag with a red diagonal cross symbolizing the extent to which this school directs outwardly the studies of undergraduate students. The small black design element, the ermine, recalls the ermine-trimmed hood commonly worn by medieval scholars.

School of Law

Royal purple, the academic color of the law hood, is combined with a pattern of ermine on white. Ermine-trimmed robes are traditionally associated with justice, and the flag represents the dual concerns of law and justice.

School of Medicine

The green used for the degree hoods for medicine and allied subjects forms a background for the Aesculapian staff and serpent long used as the symbol for medicine and healing. The geometric pattern of white on red repeats the design element so prominently displayed on the Medical School building.

Stanford Doerr School of Sustainability

The blue and green design symbolizes mountains and sky, while the dark blue and orange reflects the critical role of engineering. The knot in gold represents the sciences, which is embedded on a white background to represent the humanities and to further symbolize collaboration across disciplines.

University Flag

This flag takes as its primary design, the triple redwood frond, a symbolic and recurring element in the school flags, to symbolize the synthesis involved in the generation of knowledge.

Presidential Flag

The President's Flag is derived from the seal adopted by the University's first president. The tree represented in its natural colors, on a white background, is set off from the Stanford cardinal red field by a similar uniting ring, also used in the University seal.

The Academic Dress

Cap

The cap also known as a "mortarboard" is black with a cloth cover. Bachelor's and master's candidates wear these caps. A tassel that hangs from the mortarboard may be black or reflect the colors of the academic institution. Generally, institutions require undergraduate candidates to wear the tassel on the right front side before degrees are conferred and to shift them to the left once degrees are awarded. Doctoral candidates and faculty wear a tam which has a gold tassel.

Gown and Hood

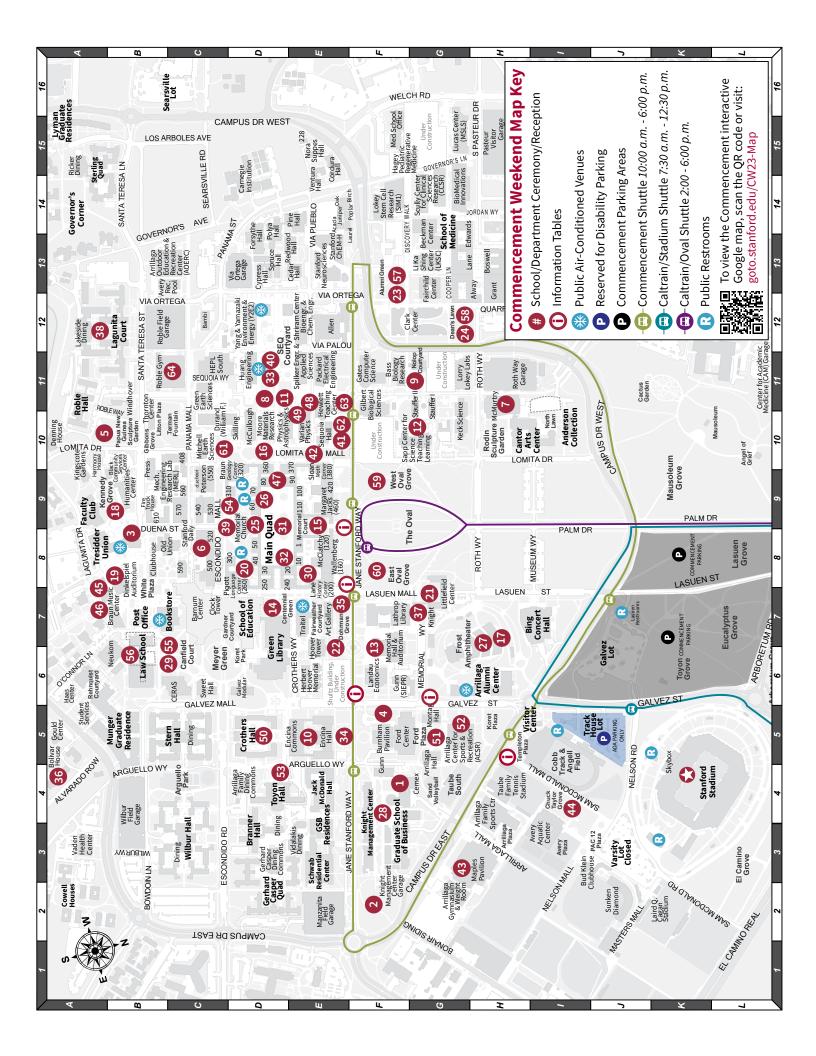

The bachelor's, master's, and doctor's gowns differ slightly in pattern. The gown for master's degree has oblong sleeves that open at the wrist. The doctor's gown bears velvet trimmings down the front and three bars across each sleeve. The velvet may be black, or it may be a color indicating the subject in which the wearer holds their degree. The doctor's and master's gowns are worn with a hood. The color(s) in the lining of the hood are those of the university or college which granted the degree, and the edging is the color of the wearer's scholarly discipline.
